Managing and Accommodating Invisible Disabilities in the Workplace - A Community Based Approach

Adam Munnings, Founder & Indigenous Lawyer, Munnings Law

Jennifer D. Wiegele, Partner, Mathews, Dinsdale & Clark LLP

Managing and accommodating employee mental health and/or substances issues present an increasing challenge in the contemporary workplace. Given the stigma surrounding such issues, it can be challenging to know when employees are struggling with mental health or substance issues and how to best manage and/or assist such employees. We will discuss the steps an employer should take when it suspects that, or is advised that, an employee has a mental health or substance abuse issue. We will learn what steps should be taken if an issue of accommodation or performance management arises and discuss traditional and contemporary approaches to addressing these issues in the workplace.

This seminar will use case studies, interactive discussions of fact patterns and group exercises to gain a deeper understanding of effective ways to manage and accommodate employees with mental health and/or substance abuse issues.

- Identify invisible disabilities and understand employer obligations such as the Duty to Enquire and the Duty to Accommodate;
- How to prepare requests for medical information and how to identify when you may require further medical information;
- To implement effective return to work arrangements, including drafting 3return to work agreements; and
- Skills and tools to effectively support and manage an employee in recovery once he or she returns to work.

14:15 - 15:15

Best Practices for Supporting an Employee's Recovery and Return to Work Following a Leave for Mental Illness and/or Substance Abuse

- Preparing effective "Ulysees" agreements and Return to Work Agreements;
- Monitoring and Working with Employees once he or she is Back at Work; and
- Dealing with Relapses or Set Backs

Kerry A. Jothen, CEO & Principal, Human Capital Strategies

09:10 - 10:00

Indigenous Community Nation Building Through Effective Human Resources

Diane Carriere, President, Canadian Aboriginal Human Resources Management Association (CAHRMA)

- Realities: human resource management IS different within Indigenous organizations than other Canadian workplaces due to location, cultural relevance and the communities socio-employment stories
- Economics: building strong Indigenous communities requires effective alignment at the forefront with the strategic alignment of leadership, economic development, and human resources that work together as one at the design table
- Leadership: HR is a core function & requires the support of leadership to deploy resources and be provided with a responsibility of trust to operate in the best interest of the employer
- Development: due to the specialization of their situations, Indigenous HR managers need their own 'space & place' to connect, network and share practices to maintain their motivation and stay 'sharp'
- Future: with the evolution of human resource practices and workplaces globally, the experiences and expertise among Indigenous approaches to HR, offer Indigenous agencies the opportunity to become the models of what it takes to operationalize truly inclusive workplaces

10:00 - 10:15 Networking Break

Human Resources Management for Indigenous Communities

September 17, 18 & 19, 2019 • Vancouver, British Columbia

DAY THREE PROGRAM AGENDA: THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2019

10:15 - 11:15

Workplace Wellness

Kim Humphreys, President, Workforce by Design

- Understand the components of a comprehensive Workplace Wellness approach, why it's important and how to achieve it in your workplace.
- Learn how to anchor Workplace Wellness in a relational worldview where everything is connected - using the concept of 'two-eyed seeing' to better understand where the best of Indigenous and western perspectives and practices are combined to maximize quality, benefit and unity.
- Understand what a Health and Safety Management System (HSMS) is - why it is important; how to use it as a framework to meet legal obligations and establish organization standards that exceed requirements; and, how and where to implement it in your organization

11:15 - 12:15

Strategic HR Planning, Strategy Development & Execution for Indigenous Communities

Kerry A. Jothen, CEO & Principal, Human Capital Strategies

- Determining where you are, where you are going and how you are going to get there are critical questions to answer before Indigenous communities take action on HR and workforce priorities
- Working in a respectful, trusting way with Indigenous communities and taking the time to learn and understand their governance, history, language, culture are the first requirement in building capacity and an effective strategic approach to HR and workforce strategy
- Information - data and knowledge collection, information management and utilization - is a key part of Indigenous capacity building and HR and workforce strategy development. This has to be conducted in a culturally sensitive way, adhering to CAPTM principles
- Execution of Indigenous HR and workforce strategy requires a solid implementation plan that clearly articulates leadership, project management, roles, resources, timelines and phasing, monitoring and reporting, evaluation, etc. of the HR and workforce strategy
- Accountability for use of resources and results of HR and workforce strategy and execution are critical. Having a clear logic model, data tracking/monitoring/reporting procedures, clear, relevant KPIs, and reliable performance evaluation will give Indigenous governments', community members', funders' and partners' needs confidence in your accountability
