Tools and Resources to Tackle Housing and Homelessness in Small Communities

Zain Abedin, Director, Community Development, Alberta Rural Development Network

Scott Travis, Director, Research and Programs, Alberta Rural Development Network

- ARDN

Overview on ARDN, its programs and how the attendees can benefit from some of the resources and programs created by ARDN

- Sustainable Housing Initiative (SHI)

Overview on the Sustainable housing initiative at the ARDN which was developed to help communities across Canada access funding to develop affordable housing along with a couple of case studies of projects currently underway

- Step-By-Step Guide to Developing Affordable Housing

Overview of the free Step-by-Step Guide to Developing Affordable Housing created by the SHI at ARDN to create a model to help small communities across Canada successfully navigate through the affordable housing development process themselves. In this section, we will introduce the guide, go over its development process, how it is laid out and how the communities can use it themselves

- Homelessness Estimations and the Step-by-Step guide to Estimating Rural Homelessness

Rural homelessness may look much different than the homelessness seen in the cities. After listening to rural groups who were trying to understand homelessness situation and the housing needs in their communities, ARDN developed a Step-by-Step Guide to Estimating Rural Homelessness. This Guide is free to community organizations and helps walk them through the process of gathering data on homelessness in rural areas, which present unique challenges compared to larger urban centres. The data gathered from this estimation highlights the need for housing and potentially help in accessing funding

- Homelessness Estimation Projects and Database

After a few pilot studies, in 2018, ARDN coordinated the largest joint homelessness estimation in rural Alberta. 20 communities participated, and almost 3,000 people were found to be living in a housing-unstable situation. This project fueled the drive for several local projects, an online database for communities to share and advocate for funding. The estimation also enabled one community to join the $50 million housing program commitment from Cenovus. This success has now spurred an even larger estimation project this fall, with 28 communities joining the estimation

100% Financed Row Rowing from Shelter Rate Rental Revenues

Colin Doyle, Director, Corporate Affairs, NEXII Building Solutions Inc.

- Concept was driven by the need of the Yale First Nation where they did not have enough funds left over at that time to build a new home for a working single mom and her child who were fleeing violence
- The community needed to find a home for them quickly, so we came together and developed a tiny row house model that can be built and 100% financed, without the dependency for any government grants
- Our tiny row housing concept takes advantage of the monthly shelter rate allowance provided by the government and is consolidated to secure enough financing to purchase and install the row homes
- The design consists of either a studio triplex or two-bedroom duplex residences. We focussed on developing a single storey complex that is fast, scalable, stylish, cost-effective and allows for relatively simple installation and removal
- Each layout at a minimum is able to generate over $1,000 a month in rental income.
- As such, the Bank of Montreal is committed to providing a preliminary term sheet for any First Nation community stating they are willing to provide financing using this rental model
- Concept was endorsed by the BC Non-profit Housing Association, during the annual Housing Central Conference, where our partnership received the grand prize from the Reframe Housing Contest for Innovations in Housing
- Each row home may also feature 13.3 kW of solar panels on the roof, set-up under a grid-tie net-metered program, and financed separately by BMO to ensure each home is truly NetZero
