COVID-19: Lessons Learned

Moderator: Andrew Richardson, Principal, Simplified Risk Management Inc.

Sarah Reppchen, Financial Services Leader, Western Canada, Risk Advisory, Deloitte

Richard Cartwright, Senior Program Management Consultant, MZP Solutions

Michael Leung, Founder & Management Consultant, Canadian Cybersecurity Inc.

- Do you think the right operational risk management approach could reduce the probability or even prevent organizations from going bankrupt in economically distressed times? What are the lessons learned so far?
- If you would have to name the top 3 most underestimated non-financial risks which materialized during COVID so far, what would these be?
- One buzz-word often used to describe successful organizations weathering the COVID storm now and uncertainties in the future is “resilience”. The organizations that are resilient are more likely to survive than others – but what does this actually mean and how can other organizations adopt this approach of becoming a “resilient organization”?
- How much can technology help in managing these challenging economic times from a risk perspective?
- What did you observe in the industry as a “win theme” which helped some organizations managing the economic downturn triggered by COVID better than others?
- How much can technology help in managing these challenging economic times from a risk perspective?
- What did you observe in the industry as a “win theme” which helped some organizations managing the economic downturn triggered by COVID better than others?
- What are some lessons learned or some observations that the pandemic has had on business continuity plans?
- What are some lessons learned or some observations that the pandemic has had on cybersecurity?
- Do you think that organization’s that have embraced “Digital Transformation” are doing better than others during the pandemic? Why or why not?
- How has COVID-19 impacted how you do what you (operational risk management)? Same, better, worse?
