Emotional Intelligence: The Missing Building Block of an Anti-Racist, Inclusive and Safe Workplace

Naveen Mehta, Chief Legal Officer, MeshDiversity

- Thomas Roosevelt famously said, “No one cares how much you know until they know how much you care.” Roosevelt did not know it at the time, but he referenced what psychologists now call emotional intelligence (EI).
- Emotional Intelligence is “the ability to identify, assess and control one’s own emotions, the emotion of others and that of groups.”
- Emotional Intelligence helps in understanding other people better and building a sense of trust and psychological safety. Emotionally intelligent behaviours underpin inclusive and safe workplaces.
- Building an inclusive anti-racist culture has individual behaviour change as its foundation.
- Culture doesn’t change on its own or simply by “being nice.”
- It’s the treatment of others and interactions among colleagues and leaders that define our workplace cultures in totality.
- Whether it be regular microaggressions, issues of failing retention or barriers to upward mobility for those from equity-seeking groups, being an emotionally intelligent leader is vital to building a workplace based on belonging, inclusion and safety.
