Indigenous communities across Canada are constantly facing emergencies and natural disasters caused by weather-related events such as floods, tornadoes and landslides that are becoming more frequent and severe. The ongoing COVID-19 pandemic that has altered virtually every aspect of day-to-day life has further complicated emergency management within Indigenous communities. As a leader in your Indigenous community, it is imperative for you to take proactive measures in order to ensure the health and safety of your community when emergencies inevitably occur.

Benefits of Attending

- Navigating the COVID19 Pandemic in Indigenous Communities: Lessons Learned
- New Approaches to Address Business Continuity Planning: Key considerations for Indigenous communities
- Leveraging Technology for Critical Communication on Reserves: Implementing a framework for innovation and technology
- Implementing an Indigenous Disaster Resilience Program: Guidance, tools and resources to help build an effective resilience program

Partnerships and Cultural Safety in Emergency Support Services

Char Etzerza, Partnership Coordinator, Emergency Management BC

Kayla Pepper, Director, Indigenous Community Relations and Partnership Engagement, Emergency Management BC

- Wildfire and flood events of recent years stretched and tested British Columbia's emergency management and Emergency Support Services (ESS) systems. These events changed the landscape of emergency management in BC and led to a deepening of partnerships and a reimagining of what culturally safe, relevant, and holistic evacuee care might look like
- The goal of this session is to share wise practices and inspire emergency management leaders to reflect on opportunities for partnerships and how they might contribute to systems of care that honour Indigenous culture, knowledge and community-based practices
- The presentation will be grounded in the results of an action-oriented project where 22 Indigenous emergency management and support organization representatives shared practical and systemic suggestions for integrating cultural safety into Emergency Support Services

Indigenous Disaster Resilience: Justice-Oriented Best Practices across the Emergency Management Cycle

Brenda Murphy, Professor, Wilfrid Laurier University; Former Co-Chair Indigenous Resilience Working Group, Canadian Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction

This presentation will define Indigenous disaster resilience, with an emphasis on justice and equity. From an ally's perspective, it will outline how emergency management's four overlapping and interconnected steps - mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery - can be oriented towards addressing the systemic racism and structural barriers that limit effective disaster resilience in Indigenous communities. Potential best practices that work towards enhancing justice-oriented Indigenous disaster resilience will be outlined.
