Stronger Enforcement Regime, Serious Penalties and Private Right of Action

Wendy Wagner, Partner, Gowling

Julie Himo, Partner, Norton Rose Fulbright LLP

- Currently, the Commissioner does not have the power to make orders after findings of non-compliance
- The CPPA would give the Commissioner the power to make orders requiring organizations to conform with and stop contravening the CPPA, comply with a compliance agreement or make public measures taken to correct privacy practices.
- If after completing an inquiry the Commissioner finds that an organization has contravened one or more specified provisions of the CPPA, the Commissioner would be able to recommend that a newly created Personal Information and Data Protection Tribunal impose a monetary penalty of up to C$10-million or three per cent of the organization's total global revenues for the prior financial year.
- This Tribunal would be composed of three to six members appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Innovation, Science and Industry.
- Greater fines are possible for various offences under the CPPA
- A private right of action would be available for an individual who suffered damages or injury caused by a contravention of the Act for which the organization has been the subject of an adverse finding by the Commissioner or Tribunal
